

PREFACE

Block print by Mike Croft, courtesy of Bob Wethern.

“The genuine fisherman never argues with his impulse, he just goes, blissfully ignoring family ties and the call of business. He goes, even from the backwoods of his mind, he knows that his fish will cost him hundreds of dollars per pound. Fishing then is a passion, but the man who called it incurable lunacy went too far for the fisherman is the sanest of the sane. Of all the men, he is most keenly aware that being everlastingly busy is neither a good rule of health nor a sound business policy.”

—ANONYMOUS